Moving Forward in Indiana: The Facts on Mass Transit and the Impact on Real Estate Development

Mass Transit not only affects the way people move in a community, it influences state and local planning policy, real estate development, and economics. ULI Indiana is bringing together national transportation expert, Bob Dunphy, and Central Indiana Regional Transportation Authority Director, Ehren Bingaman to discuss what works, when it comes to mass transit, what doesn't, and the impact mass transit has on real estate development and community growth. Experts will also help you understand the current mass transit conversations in Indiana.

Bob Dunphy is a transportation consultant specializing in complex development projects requiring innovative transportation solutions. Recent projects include development near Salt Lake City's transit system, redevelopment of Tysons Corner, Virginia, a toolkit on transit supportive development for Metropolitan Planning Organizations, and case studies of sustainable suburbs. Mr. Dunphy is an Emeritus fellow with the Urban Land Institute, where he served as Senior Resident Fellow, Transportation and Infrastructure, leading high visibility projects linking innovative approaches to traffic, transit, and parking with sustainable development, and representing ULI to members, business and civic groups, transportation practitioners and researchers on transportation policy. His books and articles on transportation and real estate include Developing Around Transit: Strategies and Solutions That Work, Share Parking, and Moving Beyond Gridlock.

Ehren Bingaman, Executive Director of the Central Indiana Transportation Authority (CIRTA), has a diverse background in planning, economic development, policy, and communications and holds degrees in Urban Planning and Development and Political Science from Ball State University. Mr. Bingaman, a lifelong resident of Indiana, will provide insight into the current mass transit conversations locally.
