

Infrastructure 2011 A Strategic Priority

ULI North Florida

Rethinking Transportation Investments

Infrastructure 2011 reviews infrastructure and transportation efforts in major U.S. metro areas, illustrating how resourceful regions can move forward on projects to enhance freight and passenger rail links, roads, and bridges—even in the face of serious fiscal hurdles—by combining various sources of funding, working across regional boundaries, and using public/private partnerships.

Speakers

Tom Beck

Director, Div. of Community Planning, DCA

Tom Beck has recently returned to the Department of Community Affairs as Director, Division of Community Planning, which oversees the state's growth management programs, including comprehensive plans, developments of regional impacts and areas of critical state concern.

Tom will provide an overview of the 2011 legislative changes to transportation planning and concurrency for comprehensive plans. As a result of these changes local governments will have greater flexibility to create specific concurrency programs to promote community goals such as economic development, affordable housing, and pedestrian/biking opportunities.
