ULI is offering this high-impact workshop for those seeking to learn the fundamentals and benefits of using an Integrative Design Process to achieve enhanced asset performance and value. Two of the nation's most respected authorities on Integrative Design will demonstrate how the Integrative Process may help mitigate both project and market risk by providing greater market differentiation and a competitive advantage to organizations in markets with a high supply of green buildings.

This session has been designed specifically for owners, development managers, project managers and owners' representatives who want to get the most out of their investments and design and construction teams. Participants will learn enhanced management and critical thinking techniques that empower project team members to rise to their full potential in delivering high performance buildings to the marketplace in the most cost-effective manner.
